"This [past] summer I was given the opportunity to live in Washington DC on a full scholarship while working with the immigration Law Firm Grossman Young. Having the chance to live in DC and work for a law firm provided me with the opportunity to develop a stronger sense of identity and learn the ins and outs of the legal field. On top of that, through my summer internship and The Washington Center, I was able to connect with several law school admissions officers, as well as multiple individuals working within political/governmental fields; these were important moments in expanding my network as I hope to one day attain a federal job centered around law."
